HOUSE OF THE WEEK

House offers plenty of space and light

CAPE MAY – Upon viewing the size of this home at 1012 New York Ave., in Cape May, one would assume there is a lot of room inside.

One would be correct. Generous room sizes is one of the best features in this 5,000 square foot home, said Tricia Hendricks, sales associate with Wilsey Realty.

Built in the late 1800s, this home has three floors and seven bedrooms. The current owners have had it 30 years after purchasing it as a summer home.

"The owners have adapted it to the family needs over the years," Hendricks said. "It now has pipes that don't talk to you, modern heating system, multi-zoned central air-conditioning..."

You enter the home off the traditional Cape May porch.

"The house has the Cape May porch everyone wants. When people rebuild a home in Cape May the first thing they add is a porch. It's truly an extension of the interior living space," Hendricks said.

Going into the house, Hendricks was quick to point out the flow of the living space.

"It is gracious and flows – it's not a collection of small closed rooms," she said. "The flow is great and it goes from front to back."

Hendricks said there is a grandeur in the dining room that allows a group to come together and eat, but also allows for entertaining. The room expands visually and literally as it pumps out about four feet wider than the landing area from which you enter.

Upon entering one also gets the sense of light the house affords from its many windows, but also from the interior colors. The front of the house features wainscotting, with a ledge for holding ornamental objects, a little more than half way up the wall. Hendricks said this is part of the historic integrity of the house the owners tried to maintain, and which builders now try to replicate. "It's what Paul Burgin and Ken Mann try to recreate when they build a new house," she said.
