

Harbor Gallery to exhibit ocean-inspired art through June

CAPE MAY — The Harbor Gallery has chosen two local artists inspired by the ocean — Johnny Glogowski and Janet Payne — to exhibit for the month of June.

All artwork is for sale, with a portion supporting New Jersey Audubon's Nature Center of Cape May, at 1600 Delaware Ave., where the gallery is located.

Glogowski is a local self-taught photographer who started shooting videos and photographs of skateboarders more than 10 years ago as a way to still be around his friends after being injured.

He soon turned his camera to the ocean and surfers. A North Cape May native, his love of the ocean started at an early age, spending hours tossed by the waves with his friends.

"The ocean is everything to me," he said. "It's my friends. It's my peace and quiet. It's my teacher. It's my therapy. It's an instant mood changer."

Glogowski's photographs capture the mood of the ocean, often shot during the "golden hour," the last hour of the day. Glogowski shoots in both black and white and color depending on the story or feeling he wants to portray with each photo.

Payne is a local artist and jeweler who spends hours each morning walking the beaches of Cape May to collect sea glass for her jewelry.

Along the way she picks up beach trash, which she uses to create fanciful fish out of the plastic collected from the tide line.

Payne was inspired to start picking up beach trash after seeing microplastic on the strand line of a beach in Hawaii more than six years ago.

"I want to make sure that all of our grandchildren have a beautiful beach to enjoy and explore. I hope that my fish can be a conversation starter about our use of single-use plastic and hopefully bring about some changes in our every day use of plastics," she said.

Payne is inspired by the natural, ocean-worn textures in the driftwood she finds on the beach. Using acrylic paint, she gently coaxes the natural seascapes out of these pieces of wood, which are then framed with bits of dune fencing that she also finds on the beach.
